David Meischen: Two Poems [1]

November 30, 2015 Featured Poetry [2]

That Subtle Knot

They bike to the river together, two men abreast on the darkening trail. Whisper the word. Abreast. Lips kiss air to make a silent b, tongue taps at teeth for t, an aftertaste of desire mingling with something like prayer, the heartbeat of the unvoiced word-abreast, abreast, abreastas if, riding side by side, they share one space, two hearts pumping to the same beat, like the young Abe Lincoln and Joshua Fry Speed, awake in the dark in the bed they shared for years. Holding hands perhaps, as men once did. Talking until sleep came, making of words and breath a bond that does not bind. Did they descend like Donne's lovers to the anchored ecstasy of squeeze and release, a spill of essences into the hush that breathed between them? The words they left behind say little of bodies. Love, they wrote. Intimate. Heart. But like this pair of bicyclers, lost to the cooling hush, Abraham and Joshua are gone, no witness left behind to tell us if they spooned for warmth against the winter cold. Or touched all the secret places that can make two bodies one.

Storm Warning

1602 Post Office, Galveston, early September 1974

Five thousand miles away, the gargoyles hover over Notre Dame. You tell me they have wings. Crushed shells beneath our feet, your hand straining against the leash, between us a Great Dane lunges, between us the scent of sea, the cries of gulls, your eyes on me, an invitation. The fruit you brandy will lift us—cherries, peaches, apricots fermenting in sugar—desire's fizzy nibble, fingertips at your top shirt button, tongue tip to the salt sweat beneath. But the gargoyles hulk, they do not fly. That lift is a weight

I have not learned to carry, a dream of free fall, foretaste of mornings waking to you and sunlight pouring in like judgment.

(function(i,s,o,g,r,a,m){i['GoogleAnalyticsObject']=r;i[r]=i[r]||function(){ (i[r].q=i[r].q||[]).push(arguments)},i[r].l=1*new Date();a=s.createElement(o), m=s.getElementsByTagName(o)[0];a.async=1;a.src=g;m.parentNode.insertBefore(a,m) })(window,document,'script','https://www.goofglege 2 of 3 analytics.com/analytics.js','ga'); ga('create', 'UA-18260536-1', 'auto'); ga('send', 'pageview'); Honi soit qui mal y pense. I should have known you in Paris, where stone carves itself into shapes of need. The gargoyles test their wings. You turn to me, your eyes like undertow, no panic like the panic of no air, a hurricane tracking toward landfall, Gulf waters at the seawall, pulling, pulling.
