

Robin Chapman: Poem [1]

May 2, 2016 Math Poetry [2]

Stepping out of the meeting, our spinning energy of a week's workshop slowing, I watch the white breath of the snow lift into mist, erase the mountains the sound of a train threads the clouds, bearing logs or oil out of hearing all week we have been listening to the echoes of numbers, one hundred ways to prove cubic roots tucking laser-cut spirals into globes imagining hypercubes assembled by pairs, parenthetically reminded that every opening must have its closing computed the relative risk of being the victim of a mass shooting or catastrophe in an old pine forest the dynamics of a heart attack the mist that rises becomes the cloud descending sometimes we forget the mountains

Art Information

- “thinstringtwist” © Niels Langeveld; used by permission.

Robin Chapman is author of eight books of poetry, including the collaboration Images of a Complex World: The Art and Poetry of Chaos (World Scientific), with her poems and physicist J. C. Sprott's fractal images and explanations; and the eelgrass meadow and One Hundred White Pelicans, poems of climate change from Tebot Bach. A ninth book, Six True Things, about her childhood in the Manhattan Project town of Oak Ridge, Tennessee, is forthcoming from Tebot Bach in 2016.

Source URL: <https://talkingwriting.com/robin-chapman-poem>

Links:

[1] <https://talkingwriting.com/robin-chapman-poem>

[2] <https://talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/spotlight-math-poetry>