

The Willow Blossoms from Its Secret [1]

May 6, 2019 Featured Poetry [2] Disabled Poets Take on... [3]

Three Poems by Sheila Black

The Willow Blossoms from Its Secret

I am thinking about what girls like my girl learn in those years of awkward knees and everyone talking about B.O. like it's some kind of crime.
And the thread of blood that must be hidden under thick swaddling of white, white gauze, and the cruelty in gyms of body hair and shaming the slow. And how she, limber-light, learned to walk as if there were lead in her bones, a lead you

The Willow Blossoms from Its Secret

Published on Talking Writing (<https://talkingwriting.com>)

could almost see, irradiated a dangerous blue, as though in time it would make her disappear, her too-solid flesh (to her) resolve into green-leaf and dew. I know why a girl might wish to become a tree—to subject herself as if at random to any passing storm. You play the music as loudly as you can, you floor it, you careen, and what is more terrifying or beautiful or bone-alone than our desert at night with its lunar gas stations and creepy rest stops, and the hiss of “pretty” everywhere, and all of us around a seed: the willow blooming from its secret house even beside the river that rises but once a year. My daughter looks gobsmacked, my daughter looks struck lightning. All at once, she has made herself a god. She shows me the pictures to prove it. This is a heart. This is the liver. This is the face, the expression of a person who has never been.

For the Greenhouse Gases

Grape, madder rose, chrysanthemum, the pale jade bowl of tea in which we float the slightly unpleasant chamomile flower. Bitter pit, rind of cheese, bone that gleams against our teeth. Joy of blue-red rare steak, and french fries in hot duck grease. Thicket. Pool of shadow. Snowdrops under pines. The sighing of sea or corn fields in tornado season. Drunken orchards, apples splitting under our Jackbooted feet. Burial grounds, unnamed. The sign for John Day against the cliff where fossils of bone-light mammals, some that could fit into your palm. They do not exist. Draw, canyon face, arroyo, mesa, bosque. Acequias, watercourses, almost invisible across a desert so hot the earth is cracking.
The walled garden. The keyhole. The knowledge you can't change for anyone, not even yourself. Madder rose, stamen, pollen, termite, ant, maggot, roly-poly. Loam and the spines of leaves. A clear liquor distilled from raspberries.

Rembrandt, 1639

Tell them of the sheen
of indigo,

how it spears at the edge of certain summer skies, at noon

when shadows disappear, the sky swallows its mouthful of black.

I see the irises on her table, the sharp lemon of their insides.

I can spare her nothing. They will all die

The Willow Blossoms from Its Secret

Published on Talking Writing (<https://talkingwriting.com>) before me. I don't know this yet.

Only the men coming to count the canvases, over which, greedy, I weep as if they were children, though they are hardly alive.

What awaits me is the indigo of short nights on streets where the rain falls in a steady stream. My wooden shoes will split.

I used to think I might float if I walked quickly enough. I have grown much too heavy, I think.

Here, a gesture I have always loved: wet two fingers and hold the candle shut.

Tell them of the sheen
of indigo.

That truth is mute and terrible like God.

Art Information

- “Ma?a Hania (Little Hannah),” “Lining,” and untitled image © Piotr Ma?czak [4]; used by permission.

Sheila Black is the author of four poetry collections, most recently Iron, Ardent (Educe Press, 2017). She is a co-editor of Beauty Is a Verb: The New Poetry of Disability (Cinco Puntos Press, 2011).

The Willow Blossoms from Its Secret

Published on Talking Writing (<https://talkingwriting.com>)

Her poems have appeared in Poetry, The Spectacle, Third Point Press, and the New York Times. She currently divides her time between Washington, D.C., and San Antonio, Texas.

Source URL: <https://talkingwriting.com/willow-blossoms-its-secret>

Links:

- [1] <https://talkingwriting.com/willow-blossoms-its-secret>
- [2] <https://talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/featured-poetry>
- [3] <https://talkingwriting.com/tw-channels-and-categories/disabled-poets-take>
- [4] <http://pmanczak.pl/>